

New Primary Language Curriculum for English and Irish - junior infants to second class

Information Leaflet for Parents

The Primary Curriculum is changing. Soon your child will be experiencing a new Language Curriculum for English and Irish.

Who is the new Language Curriculum for?

The new curriculum for English and Irish is for all children from junior infants to second class in all schools - English-medium schools, Gaeltacht schools, Irish-medium schools and special schools.

Why is there a new curriculum?

The curriculum is changing so that it is up-to-date with the times we live in, with developments in language learning and the introduction of the Free Pre-school Years. Since the last curriculum (1999), society and communities have changed greatly, as has your child's learning environment. Teachers say they would like more guidance on the best ways to help children in their language learning. Thanks to research, we now know more about how children learn to speak, read and write and how to help them make progress in ways that are well suited to their learning needs.

How is the new Language Curriculum different from the one introduced in 1999?

The new curriculum is structured to make it easier for teachers to support children learning both English and Irish. As a parent, the biggest difference you'll see is in how your child will learn the two languages in school. Over the coming years,

- your child will have lots of opportunities to talk in class, give their opinion and express their thoughts and ideas. The curriculum highlights the importance of children developing their oral language skills as well as learning to read and write.
- your child will be supported in making progress in oral language, reading and writing at a level and pace suited to them. The new Language Curriculum supports children with different learning strengths and needs.
- much of your child's language learning, particularly in the infant classes, will happen through play and playful interactions with their friends and teacher in the classroom. This will help them to build on their language learning in the pre-school years based on Aistear: the Early Childhood Curriculum Framework.
- your child will see links between English and Irish and come to understand that what they learn in one helps when learning the other language.

Overall, the new Language Curriculum supports teachers in providing language learning experiences for all children that will help them reach their full potential in English and Irish.

How does the Language Curriculum help my children to learn Irish?

The new Language Curriculum will support your child to learn Irish at a pace and level that suits them.

In an English-medium school, your child will be encouraged to use Irish in Irish lessons and during the school day. Gaeltacht schools and Gaelscoileanna can choose to teach through Irish during the whole school day for a period up to the end of senior infants. Where this happens, your child will learn English in school after this period of time. Schools work with parents and boards of management when making this decision.

Support is available at the website below to help you and your child to use Irish at home.

Is the rest of the primary curriculum changing?

Yes, over the coming years the entire primary curriculum will be reviewed. Work has started on a new language curriculum for children from third to sixth class.

Where can I find more information?

The new Language Curriculum for English and Irish is available at www.curriculumonline.ie. There are videos introducing the curriculum as well as other material looking at different aspects of language learning and teaching.

How can I support my child at home?

As a parent or guardian, you can encourage your child to talk about things that interest them and to have fun with reading and writing. The curriculum online includes a section called Support Material. While much of this looks at classroom work, you might find some of it helpful at home. The material includes lots of practical advice, photos and videos about how you might support your child as they learn to read, write and to enjoy talking about many different topics.
